Honda Accord

OLD-SCHOOL HONDA GOODNESS.

THE FOUR-CYLINDER ACCORD PROVES that when Honda plays to its strengths, it is better than anyone at producing vehicles with a supernaturally fine balance of attributes. That this is still true while Honda is widely acknowledged to have lost some of its product magic puts the all-around excellence of the four-cylinder Accord in stark relief. This is a big sedan (without a sunroof, roomy enough to reside in the EPA's Large Sedan category) that's lighter on its feet than many sports coupes you could mention. The primary controls are so perfectly matched to each other that this not-exactly-sporty-looking sedan can traipse along the tightrope of your favorite back road with precision and utter predictability. It will return 33 mpg on the highway; a well-equipped EX version costs just one nice dinner more than $25,000 (a little more for the coupe); and it's a more natural heel-and-toe enabler than most sports cars. That's an unparalleled breadth of talent and goodness. Whether this Accord becomes the guiding light for the future of Honda or is simply a star that hasn't quite extinguished yet, we don't know. For now, it shines as brilliantly as ever.
